"Imagine Person A of your OTP sitting in Person B's lap while playing Mario Kart."

Merida opened up Hiccup's door to his room- although, it was more like their room. There was no privacy in the same house as Jack and Merida; only Hiccup and Rapunzel had the decency to knock. Although, Hiccup was far more comfortable with Merida just randomly barging in.

"Hey, Hiccup.." Merida said after being less than a foot in, light sounds of a bag was rustling behind her hands.

"Yes?" Hiccup looked up from his book that he was currently reading, to look at the red headed woman.

"Well- I got a new game." She began. Hiccup wasn't sure at his emotions so far of why she was asking. There was a pause before her thick accent continued. "Can we play it together?"

Hiccup questioned what game it was- considering their game genre's really didn't collide together. Hiccup prefers games that rarely has anything that'd jump out and make him jump to the ceiling- for Merida? It was completely the opposite.

"What.. What game?" Hiccup asked after a moment.

"Well, it's a game ye'd never suspect." Merida said, eyeing at the male.

He laughed, "Oh really?" He asked.

"Okay, fine." Merida rolled her eyes, playfully. "Rapunzel told me that it was fun- so I gotten it.. It's Mario Kart."

"Wow, you're right. I'd never expect that." Hiccup played around. Merida was going to turn on her heel as a mission of failure, since so far everyone in the house said no- minus Rapunzel, as she was out taking walks- but Hiccup stopped her and said a simple "Sure" with his smile showing brightly.

Merida had bought the steering wheels to go along with the game after Rapunzel mentioned that they needed it in order to play. Hiccup bought out his wii- which had a limited edition Legend of Zelda cover on top of it. The controllers also had the same, and he slipped them into the wheel carefully.

Hiccup didn't have a gaming chair, so they casually borrowed Jack's. After bringing it in, Merida bundled her hair up into a ponytail that hung down, some hairs stuck out and some parts weren't pulled into the ponytail holder like it should- but it did keep it down from it being big and poofy.

Hiccup sat and got comfortable into the black gaming chair before Merida crawled and got all comfy sitting in his lap also. Hiccup smiled and moved his arms to wrap around her body, his hands resting in the front just underneath hers.

They started the game, chose their characters and began playing.

They lost track playing the game, but while they were playing, they felt comfortable just cuddling and playing. Occasionally, if Merida lost, she would lightly pinch Hiccup's leg or shout in frustration. Hiccup would look really shocked if he lost before seeing Merida's grin of happiness.

Merida rested her head on the male's shoulder while his chin rested on her shoulder. He turned the game off after agreeing with the red head, and turned Netflix on.

"Thanks Hic." Merida thanked him, kissing him on the cheek while his lips etched into a smile. He looked at her, humming a 'hmm' lightly before asking her.

"For?"

"Well, I wanted to play a game, and everyone but ye said no." Merida explained, Hiccup laughed lightly.

"You're so adorable." He casually said, and Merida slapped his arm playfully and gently.

"You're welcome." He kissed her temple.
